Finally, here comes the moment everyone wishes for: the moment of graduation through which you reap the fruits of your labor over four years—and perhaps more—of study and effort. It is time to start your career. However, this does not mean you will find the right job after graduation, and you might live through the hardest moments in finding the right job. Sadness and frustration may creep into you, and when anyone asks you about your condition, you answer with despair and grieve that you are unemployed. But hold on a moment! Why do you look at this period with all this pessimism? Do you not know that this period cannot be compensated for or repeated in your life? Why not change your outlook on it and treat it as a "self discovery" period? Yes, it is the appropriate period in which you can return to think again and inspect your talents, your life, and everything that is important and exciting.
